

Citizenship Pluralism and National Identity

Kjersti Fjørtoft, Professor, Department of Philosophy, University of Tromsø, The Arctic University of Norway.

The lecture is about how citizenship should be understood and conceptualized in liberal and plural societies. The main questions is: what is good citizenship and what kind of political identity should be protected. There will be a discussion of the difference between liberal and republican conceptions and a critical David Miller's claim that democratic welfare states need to be supported by national identity.

Keywords: Citizenship, Liberalism, Republicanism, National identity.
